

West Hollywood Library Dream Project Closer to Becoming Reality

By Shana Ting Lipton, About.com Guide June 21, 2011

Can't get enough of West Hollywood and books? Perhaps you make the 'pilgrimage' to the West Hollywood Book Fair each year, and love popping into locally owned bookshops like Book Soup and The Bodhi Tree (the latter of which is soon to close).

Fear not, you'll soon have yet another brand spanking new book haunt to frequent: the West Hollywood Library.

Under construction for over two years, the dream project in West Hollywood Park is set to open on October 1st (not so coincidentally, the day before the W. Hollywood Book Fair). It's going to be 32,000 square foot, LEED-certified, and is being billed as a centerpiece of the WeHo community.

Some of the library's features include an LGBT area, HIV/AIDS collection, a children's theatre, an art and design collection and library bookstore.

A few lucky press people will get the chance to preview the library tomorrow.

Photo Courtesy of City of West Hollywood, Credit: Jo Anne Sitjar